

Researching and Writing a Dissertation: A Guidebook for Business Students

Second edition

Colin Fisher

with

John Buglear

Diannah Lowry

Alistair Mutch

Carole Tansley

Contents

Acknowledgements	ix
0 Introduction	1
Who is this guide for?	2
What does doing a dissertation involve?	2
The process of doing a dissertation	3
What does working at Master's level mean?	7
The assessment criteria	10
The learning outcomes and assessment criteria	11
Jargon, 'isms' and 'ologies'	13
How to use this guide	25
Suggested reading	26
Other recommended books	27
References	27
1 Choosing a topic and designing the project	29
Introduction	30
Choosing a topic	31
Criteria for choosing a topic *	31
A six-stage process for choosing your topic	33
Designing your project	39
Methodological stance	40
The researcher's role	58
Breadth or depth	59
Choice of research methods	61
Ethical considerations	63
Writing the research proposal	71
Summary	74
Suggested reading	74
References	74

2	Writing a critical literature review	77
	Introduction	78
	The sources	80
	Searching for literature	82
	Mapping and describing the literature	86
	Describing the literature	• 86
	Assessing the quality of an article or book	92
	Forensic critique	94,
	Soundness of arguments	94
	Evaluating arguments	97
	Radical critique	105
	The critical approach - Alistair Mutch	105
	Developing a radical critique	108
	Summary	116
	Suggested reading	116
	References	116
3	Concepts, conceptual frameworks and theories	119
	Introduction	120
	The roles of theory and conceptual frameworks	122
	Developing conceptual-frameworks	125
	Defining concepts	125
	Conceptual frameworks	126
	Theories	133
	Seeking inspiration: using your 'intellectual baggage'	134
	Examples of the use of conceptual frameworks	139
	An example of conceptualising and theorising in a study of organisational cultures	139
	Another example	144
	Summary	149
	Suggested reading	149
	References	150
4	Collecting and analysing research material	151
	Introduction	• 152
	Discoverers	• 153
	Structure of the chapter	• 157

The range of research methods	158
Interviews	158
Panels	159
Questionnaires	161
Documentary research	161
Observational research	161
Deciding whether to use open or pre-structured methods	165
Planning and setting milestones	165
Exploratory research methods	166
Collecting the material	166
Interpretive approaches	171
Analysing the material	180
Survey research: pre-coded and structured research methods	189
Collecting the material	189
Analysing the material: basic statistical analysis of data - Diannah Lowry	207
Software for analysing research material	222
Using Minitab and SPSS to analyse survey results - John Buglear	222
Software for analysing qualitative material - Carole Tansiey	253
Summary	264
Suggested reading	265
References	265
Interpreting the research material	267
Introduction	268
Choosing an interpretive grid	272
Styles of interpretive grid and the problem of 'universals'	274
Realism	276
Nominalism	281
Critical realism	284
Mixing interpretive grids	288
The validity and authenticity of research material	290
Saying what you mean	290
Saying what is valid	294
Improving the validity of research findings	299
Dialectical critique	303
Framing conclusions and recommendations	307

Problems of implementation	311
Accepting the limitations	312
Summary	313
Suggested reading	313
References	313
6 Framing arguments and writing up	315
Introduction	316
Structuring your dissertation	317
Writing a thesis, not just a dissertation	319
Constructing arguments	321
Constructing dialectical arguments	323
Supporting your arguments	325
Style guide	336
Dissertation, report and paper specifications	336
Style hints	338
Summary	347
Suggested reading	347
References	348
Index	349