

Bruno Latour

Down to Earth

Politics in the New Climatic Regime

Translated by Catherine Porter

polity

Contents

Acknowledgments	viii
1. A hypothesis as political fiction: the explosion of inequalities and the denial of climate change are one and the same phenomenon	I
2. Thanks to America's abandonment of the climate agreement, we now know clearly what war has been declared	3
3. The question of migrations now concerns everyone, offering a new and very wicked universality: finding oneself deprived of ground	7
4. One must take care not to confuse globalization-plus with globalization-minus	12
5. How the globalist ruling classes have decided to abandon all the burdens of solidarity, little by little	17
6. The abandonment of a common world leads to epistemological delirium	21

7. The appearance of a third pole undoes the classical organization of modernity torn between the first two poles, the Local and the Global	25
8. The invention of “Trumpism” makes it possible to identify a fourth attractor, the Out-of-This-World	33
9. In identifying the attractor we can call Terrestrial, we identify a new geopolitical organization	38
10. Why the successes of political ecology have never been commensurate with the stakes	45
11. Why political ecology has had so much trouble breaking away from the Right/Left opposition	48
12. How to ensure the relay between social struggles and ecological struggles	56
13. The class struggle becomes a struggle among geo-social positions	58
14. The detour by way of history makes it possible to understand how a certain notion of “nature” has immobilized political positions	64
15. We must succeed in breaking the spell of “nature” as it has been pinned down by the modern vision of the Left/Right opposition	70
16. A world composed of objects does not have the same type of resistance as a world composed of agents	74
17. The sciences of the Critical Zone do not have the same political functions as those of the other natural sciences	78

18. The contradiction between the system of production and the system of engendering is heating up	82
19. A new attempt at describing dwelling places – France’s ledgers of complaints as a possible model	90
20. A personal defense of the Old Continent	99
Figures	108
Notes	110