

Tax Transparency

2018 EATLP Congress Zurich
7 – 9 June 2018

Editors:

Funda Başaran Yavaşlar and Johanna Hey

Volume 17
EATLP International Tax Series

Table of Contents

Preface		li
About the Authors		liii
Part I
The New World of Tax Transparency – Change of Paradigm?
Chapter 1:	The Notion and Concept of Tax Transparency	3
	General Report
	Johanna Hey
1.1.	Introduction: Change of paradigm?	3
1.2.	Notion and concept of tax transparency	5
1.2.1.	A term with heterogeneous meanings	5
1.2.2.	Aims and effects of tax transparency	7
1.2.3.	Recent developments	10
1.2.3.1.	Differences in tax culture as a starting point	10
1.2.3.2.	Legislation on tax transparency	11
1.2.3.3.	The role of digitalization	12
1.2.3.4.	Perception of tax transparency	13
Chapter 2:	Purpose and Problems of Tax Transparency: The Legal Perspective	17
	Thematic Report
	Roman Seer
2.1.	Basic insights	17
2.1.1.	Three-dimensional protection through tax transparency	17
2.1.1.1.	First dimension: Protection of the state and taxpayers through tax transparency of the taxpayer and third parties	18
2.1.1.2.	Second dimension: Protection of the taxpayer through transparency of the tax authorities	19
2.1.1.3.	Third dimension: Protection of democracy and the general public through a naming-and-shaming approach by using investigative journalism	20

Table of Contents

2.1.2.	Constantly growing obligations of taxpayers and third parties	20
2.1.3.	Legal framework of tax transparency	21
2.2.	Participants in tax transparency	24
2.3.	The legal perspective from a European point of view	24
2.3.1.	Reservation of law and the proportionality principle	25
2.3.2.	Right to the protection of personal data	26
2.3.3.	Specific problems of application of the GDPR	27
2.3.4.	Protection of personal data of legal entities in the European Union	29
2.3.5.	Tax secrecy standards across Europe according to national report	30
2.4.	Tax secrecy standards on the basis of multilateral agreements	31
2.5.	Information rights of the taxpayer	33
2.5.1.	Different levels of information rights	33
2.5.2.	Reasons for denial of information rights	34
2.5.3.	Freedom of Information Acts	35
2.6.	Open questions concerning new tendencies in tax transparency	35
2.6.1.	Naming-and-shaming approach according to national reports	36
2.6.2.	Naming and shaming and the protection of personal and business data	37
2.6.3.	Further questions	37
2.7.	Conclusion and outlook	38

Part II
Instruments of Transparency towards the Tax Administration
Chapter 3:	Instruments of Transparency towards the Tax Administration	41
	General Report
	Funda Başaran Yavaşlar
3.1.	Reasons for transparency of taxpayers towards the tax administration	41
3.2.	Direct effect of the tax procedure's system on transparency towards the tax administration	43
3.2.1.	In determining the information needs of the tax administration	43
3.2.2.	In the control system of the tax administration	47
3.2.2.1.	Extent of the tax administration's responsibility and authority	47
3.2.2.2.	Verification	49
3.2.2.3.	Revealing the taxation elements that are not declared	50
3.3.	Effects of digitalization on transparency towards the tax administration: A new age of tax procedure and tax control	52
3.4.	Data collection systems of tax administrations	56
3.4.1.	Data sources: Opaqueness and non-hierarchical structure	56
3.4.2.	Use of big data	61
3.4.2.1.	Potential and risks	61
3.4.2.2.	Risk management system	62
3.5.	Conclusion	64

Table of Contents

Chapter 4:	Third Parties as Supplementary Sources of Tax Transparency	67
	Thematic Report
	Tina Ehrke-Rabel
4.1.	Introduction	67
4.2.	Setting the scene for third-party contributions to taxation	68
4.3.	Traditional relationship between tax authorities and taxpayers	71
4.4.	Transparency: The new dogma	72
4.5.	Third parties as supplementary sources of taxation	75
4.5.1.	Introductory remarks	75
4.5.2.	Concept of third-party inclusion in the tax procedure	76
4.5.2.1.	Advantage of including third parties into tax enforcement	76
4.5.2.2.	Third parties as contributors to efficient collection and/or to transparency?	77
4.5.3.	Purpose of third-party contributions	78
4.5.4.	Types of third parties	79
4.5.5.	Types of data and information	81
4.5.6.	Means of transmitting information	82
4.5.7.	Sourcing of information	82
4.5.7.1.	Information upon request of the tax administration	82
4.5.7.2.	Automatic exchange of information	86
4.5.7.3.	Spontaneous exchange of information	88
4.5.7.4.	Other government institutions as third parties	91
4.5.8.	Obstacles to the use of third parties for transparency	91
4.6.	Conclusion	93

Chapter 5:	Cutting-Edge Techniques to Collect Information from Taxpayers	97
	Thematic Report
	Stan Stevens
5.1.	Introduction	97
5.2.	Public reporting of tax and other information	100
5.3.	Traditional instruments used to gather and exchange information	104
5.3.1.	Information exchange with the tax authorities	104
5.3.2.	Reporting tax information to the public	107
5.3.3.	Conclusion	110
5.4.	New measures of information-gathering and exchange with the tax authorities	111
5.4.1.	General	111
5.4.2.	Horizontal monitoring in the Netherlands	111
5.4.2.1.	The reasons behind horizontal monitoring	111
5.4.2.2.	The principles of horizontal monitoring	113
5.4.2.3.	The start of horizontal monitoring	114
5.4.2.4.	The process for concluding a compliance agreement	115
5.4.2.5.	The content of an agreement	116
5.4.2.6.	The condition to implement a tax control framework	117
5.4.2.7.	Results and challenges of horizontal monitoring	120
5.4.2.8.	Conclusion	126
5.4.3.	Mandatory disclosure rules for tax intermediaries	128
5.4.3.1.	General outline of the Directive	128
5.4.3.2.	Reportable cross-border arrangements	131
5.4.3.3.	Comments on the mandatory disclosure rules	133
5.4.3.4.	Conclusion	137
5.4.4.	Joint audits	137
5.4.5.	Conclusion	139
5.5.	New instruments of public reporting	140
5.5.1.	General	140
5.5.2.	Introduction of a UBO register	140
5.5.2.1.	Obligation to report the UBO of an entity	140
5.5.2.2.	Comments on the reporting obligation	143
5.5.2.3.	Conclusion	145
5.5.3.	Public CbCR	145

Table of Contents

5.5.3.1.	An outline of the reporting obligation	145
5.5.3.2.	Conclusion	149
5.6.	The analysis of information and big data	150
5.7.	Blockchain	152
5.8.	Conclusion	153
Chapter 6:	Tax Whistle-Blowers – An Emerging Status?	157
	Thematic Report
	Alain Steichen
6.1.	Introduction	157
6.2.	Typology	159
6.2.1.	Leaks of a fiscal nature	159
6.2.2.	Types of tax whistle-blowers	161
6.2.3.	The legal context of tax information leakage	162
6.3.	The tax alerter’s motives	164
6.3.1.	Information leakage in the public interest	164
6.3.2.	The leakage of information with a view to improving transparency	167
6.3.3.	Illegalities only, or also immoralities and unethical actions under a “civic alert” approach?	171
6.4.	The legal framework of the whistle-blower	174
6.4.1.	The applicable procedure	175
6.4.2.	Whistle-blower protection	178
6.4.3.	The legal status of information obtained through whistle-blowers	183
6.5.	Conclusion	187

Part III
Transparency and Publicity

Chapter 7:	Transparency and Publicity General Report Johanna Hey	193
7.1.	Predictability, control and mutual trust due to accountability	193
7.2.	Transparency in the communication between the taxpayer and the tax administration	195
7.2.1.	Access to one's own tax file	195
7.2.2.	Notifications	196
7.3.	Transparency through publication and disclosure	198
7.3.1.	Publication of administrative regulations, advance private rulings and mutual agreements	198
7.3.2.	Disclosure of taxpayer data to third parties and the public	203
7.3.2.1.	On request	203
7.3.2.2.	Public disclosure: Naming and shaming	205
7.4.	The role of investigative journalism	208
Chapter 8:	The Timing of Tax Transparency Thematic Report Joshua D. Blank	211
8.1.	Introduction	211
8.2.	Tax transparency as accountability	216
8.2.1.	Why transparency?	217
8.2.1.1.	Democratic governance	217
8.2.1.2.	Accountability	218
8.2.1.3.	Principal-agent relationship	218
8.2.1.4.	Limits	219
8.2.2.	Tax returns in the public eye	220
8.2.2.1.	Tax privacy today	220
8.2.2.2.	Public disclosure of individual tax returns	221
8.2.2.3.	Public disclosure of corporate tax returns	223
8.2.3.	Questionable assumptions	224

Table of Contents

8.3.	Timing and the tax authority	227
8.3.1.	Types of taxing authority actions	228
8.3.1.1.	Ex post tax enforcement	229
8.3.1.2.	Ex ante tax administration	231
8.3.2.	Why ex post tax enforcement should remain private	232
8.3.2.1.	Strategic publicity	233
8.3.2.2.	Benchmarking	236
8.3.2.3.	Reverse engineering	240
8.3.3.	Why ex ante tax administration should be public	243
8.3.3.1.	Sociological legitimacy	243
8.3.3.1.1.	Secret tax law	244
8.3.3.1.2.	Equity	246
8.3.3.1.3.	Integrity	247
8.3.3.2.	Efficiency	249
8.3.3.3.	Absence of enforcement risk	251
8.3.3.3.1.	Strategic publicity	252
8.3.3.3.2.	Benchmarking	253
8.3.3.3.3.	Reverse engineering	254
8.4.	Conclusion	254
Chapter 9:	Transparency Naming and Shaming: Are the Blacklists an Effective Tool?	255
	Thematic Report Donato Masciandaro
9.1.	Introduction	255
9.2.	Related literature	258
9.3.	Blacklisting and capital flows	261
9.4.	Conclusions	263
Chapter 10:	Swedish Experience of Publicity	265
	Thematic Report Eleonor Kristoffersson
10.1.	Introduction	265
10.2.	The right to public access to official documents	265

10.3.	Tax secrecy	267
10.4.	Should the Swedish system be implemented in other jurisdictions?	269
10.5.	Concluding remarks	271
Part IV Limitations of Transparency and Protection of the Taxpayer
Chapter 11:	Limitations of Transparency and Protection of the Taxpayer	275
	General Report
	Funda Başaran Yavaşlar
11.1.	Limitations of transparency towards the tax administration: Right to privacy	275
11.1.1.	The taxpayers' right to privacy	275
11.1.1.1.	Identification of the problem: Tax transparency versus the right to privacy of taxpayers	275
11.1.1.2.	Legal basis and meaning of the right to privacy in tax law	277
11.1.1.3.	The right to privacy of legal entities in taxation	280
11.1.2.	The limits of the restriction of the right to privacy of taxpayers	282
11.1.2.1.	According to the jurisprudence of ECtHR	282
11.1.2.2.	According to the EU GDPR and jurisprudence of Court of Justice of the European Union	285
11.1.2.3.	According to the OECD Guidelines on the Protection of Privacy and Transborder Flows of Personal Data	290
11.2.	Limitation of transparency towards third persons and the public: Tax secrecy	292
11.2.1.	Tax secrecy and the right to privacy	292
11.2.2.	Scope of tax secrecy	294
11.3.	Procedural and judicial protection of the taxpayer	297
11.4.	Conclusion	300

Table of Contents

Chapter 12:	The Right to Privacy: Scope and Boundaries of Interference	303
	Thematic Report
	Luzius U. Cavelti and Peter Hongler
12.1.	Introduction	303
12.2.	Legal sources	303
12.3.	The right to privacy and informational self-determination in general	305
12.3.1.	Introduction	305
12.3.2.	Protection of individuals in general	306
12.3.3.	Protection of corporations in general	307
12.3.4.	Limitations and justified infringements	309
12.4.	The protection of taxpayers specifically	311
12.4.1.	Introduction	311
12.4.2.	The protection of individual taxpayers	311
12.4.2.1.	Scope of protection	311
12.4.2.2.	Two specific areas of interference	312
12.4.2.2.1.	Financial information	312
12.4.2.2.2.	House searches, searches of business premises and seizure of documents	314
12.5.	Corporate taxpayers	315
12.5.1.	Scope of protection	315
12.5.2.	Two specific areas of interference	317
12.5.2.1.	Disclosure rules	317
12.5.2.2.	Attorney-client privilege	318
12.6.	Conclusion	319
Chapter 13:	Tax Secrecy: Between Legal and Normative Arguments	321
	Thematic Report
	Peter Hongler
13.1.	Overview	321
13.2.	Tax secrecy: Some comparative legal remarks	322
13.2.1.	Scope	322

13.2.1.1.	Personal scope	322
13.2.1.2.	Objective scope	323
13.2.1.3.	Exceptions	324
13.2.2.	Consequences of a breach of secrecy laws	325
13.2.3.	Intermediate conclusions	325
13.3.	A normative approach	326
13.3.1.	Arguments against tax secrecy	326
13.3.2.	In favour of transparency	327
13.3.3.	Normative assessment	328
13.4.	The legal boundaries of tax secrecy	329
13.4.1.	Negative limitation: Right to privacy	330
13.4.2.	Positive limitation: Freedom of expression	332
13.5.	Conclusion	334
Chapter 14:	Procedural and Judicial Protection	337
	Thematic Report
	Sylvie De Raedt
14.1.	Purpose of the chapter: Limitation of the object	337
14.2.	Procedural and judicial protection of the right to private life	339
14.2.1.	Introduction: Distinction between different transparency trends	339
14.2.2.	Procedural and judicial protection of the right to private life in the case of interference that involves action of the tax and other public authorities	340
14.2.2.1.	Judicial review and the requirements of the European Court of Human Rights	340
14.2.2.2.	Moment of judicial review	344
14.2.2.3.	Quality of the domestic judicial review	347
14.2.2.4.	Sanctioning the violation of the right to private life and the problem of the acceptance of unlawfully acquired information	349
14.2.2.5.	International procedural and judicial legal protection	351
14.2.2.5.1.	Procedural and judicial protection against legal measures forcing taxpayers or third parties to

Table of Contents

	disclose information to the tax authorities or the public	352
14.2.2.5.2.	Procedural and judicial protection against the public disclosure of tax information by third parties without a legal obligation	353
14.3.	Procedural and judicial protection of the right to the protection of personal data	355
14.3.1.	Introduction	355
14.3.2.	Protection of the taxpayer through transparency rights	357
14.3.3.	Protection of the taxpayer by the supervisory authority	358
14.3.4.	Protection of the taxpayer by domestic courts	359
14.3.4.1.	Right to an effective judicial remedy	359
14.3.4.2.	Legal consequences of judicial review by domestic courts	359
14.4.	Conclusion	360
 Part V National Reports
Chapter 15:	Questionnaire for the National Reports	365
15.1.	Concept of tax transparency and new tendencies	365
15.1.1.	What is the concept of tax transparency in your country and which topics are discussed under this term?	365
15.1.2.	Has there recently been a change in the perception of tax transparency?	365
15.2.	Information procurement and data usage by the tax authorities	365
15.2.1.	Which principle is pursued in your country: Self-assessment or assessment ex officio?	365
15.2.2.	How do the tax authorities obtain information?	366
15.2.2.1.	From the taxpayer himself	366
15.2.2.2.	From other sources	367
15.2.3.	International exchange of information	367
15.2.4.	Legal and practical obstacles to information procurement	368

15.2.5.	The use of the information by the tax administration, especially in respect of automatization and digitalization of the tax assessment procedure	368
15.3.	Protection of the taxpayer	368
15.3.1.	Constitutional law (also in comparison to human rights)	368
15.3.2.	Tax secrecy	368
15.3.3.	Data protection laws	369
15.3.4.	Compensation for damages and judicial protection	369
15.4.	Transparency of the tax administration	369
15.4.1.	Publication habits of the tax administration	369
15.4.2.	Transparency towards the taxpayer	369
15.4.3.	Use of information towards the public, especially the naming-and-shaming approach	370
Chapter 16:	Austria Tina Ehrke-Rabel and Christina Schwarzenbacher	371
16.1.	Concept of tax transparency and new tendencies	371
16.1.1.	The concept of tax transparency and changes in tax transparency	371
16.2.	Information procurement and data usage by the tax authorities	372
16.2.1.	The principles of self-assessment and ex officio assessment	372
16.2.2.	Information procurement by the tax administration	373
16.2.2.1.	Information directly obtained from the taxpayer	373
16.2.2.1.1.	Regular tax returns and reporting and notification obligations	373
16.2.2.1.2.	Special procedures	375
16.2.2.2.	Information obtained from other sources	376
16.2.2.2.1.	Third-party reporting obligations	376
16.2.2.2.2.	Information obtained from courts, other branches of administration and central data banks	379
16.2.2.2.3.	Information gathered for other purposes, such as the prevention of money laundering, the tackling of terrorism and the control of bribery	380
16.2.2.2.4.	Information from private stakeholders	382

Table of Contents

16.2.3.	International exchange of information	383
16.2.4.	Legal and practical obstacles to information procurement	384
16.2.4.1.	Banking secrecy	384
16.2.4.2.	Inviolability of the home	384
16.2.4.3.	Restrictions on the use of unlawfully acquired information	385
16.2.5.	Processing of information by the tax administration	386
16.3.	Protection of the taxpayer	387
16.3.1.	Constitutional law and human rights	387
16.3.1.1.	Constitutional data protection guarantees	387
16.3.1.2.	Role of the rule of law, the freedom of profession and the freedom of property	389
16.3.2.	Tax secrecy	389
16.3.2.1.	Legal basis and scope	389
16.3.2.2.	Exemptions	390
16.3.2.3.	Legal consequences of violation	390
16.3.3.	Data protection laws	391
16.3.4.	Compensation for damages and judicial protection	393
16.4.	Transparency of the tax administration	394
16.4.1.	Publication habits of the tax administration	394
16.4.1.1.	Publication of administrative directives and similar documents	394
16.4.1.2.	Publication of mutual agreements, advance tax rulings and tax haven blacklists	395
16.4.1.3.	Transparency regarding the process of risk management by the tax administration	395
16.4.2.	Transparency towards the taxpayer	395
16.4.3.	Use of information against the public, with particular reference to naming and shaming	398
Chapter 17:	Belgium	401
	Sylvie De Raedt and Amélie Lachapelle
17.1.	Concept of tax transparency and new tendencies	401
17.1.1.	Concept of tax transparency in Belgium	401
17.1.2.	Recent changes in the perception of tax transparency in Belgium	402

17.2.	Information procurement and data usage by the tax authorities	404
17.2.1.	Principle of tax data collection pursued in Belgium	404
17.2.2.	The tax authorities' sources of information	405
17.2.2.1.	The taxpayer	405
17.2.2.1.1.	Regular tax returns and reporting and notification obligations	405
17.2.2.1.2.	Special procedures	406
17.2.2.2.	Other sources	407
17.2.2.2.1.	Third-party reporting obligations (banks, employers, notaries, etc.)	407
17.2.2.2.2.	Information obtained from courts, other public authorities and central databanks	410
17.2.2.2.3.	Information gathered for other purposes, such as the prevention of money laundering, tackling terrorism and bribery control	412
17.2.2.2.4.	Information from private stakeholders	412
17.2.3.	International sharing of information	413
17.2.4.	Legal or practical obstacles to information procurement	415
17.2.5.	The processing of information by tax authorities, especially regarding the automation and digitalization of the tax assessment procedure	417
17.3.	Protection of the taxpayer	418
17.3.1.	Constitutional law (also in comparison to human rights)	418
17.3.2.	Tax secrecy	419
17.3.3.	Data protection laws	420
17.3.4.	Compensation for damages and judicial protection	423
17.4.	Transparency of the tax authorities	424
17.4.1.	Publication habits of the tax administration	424
17.4.2.	Transparency towards the taxpayer	425
17.4.3.	Use of information towards the public, with particular reference to the naming-and-shaming approach	428

Table of Contents

Chapter 18:	Croatia	431
	Nataša Žunić Kovačević and Stjepan Gadžo
18.1.	Concept of tax transparency and new tendencies	431
18.1.1.	Concept of tax transparency in Croatia	431
18.1.2.	Recent changes in the perception of tax transparency	433
18.2.	Information procurement and data usage by tax authorities	434
18.2.1.	Principles of tax assessment in Croatia	434
18.2.2.	How do tax authorities obtain information?	436
18.2.2.1.	Procurement of information directly from the taxpayer	436
18.2.2.2.	Procurement of information from other sources	439
18.2.3.	International exchange of information	440
18.2.4.	Legal or practical obstacles for information procurement	441
18.2.5.	Usage of the information by the tax administration	442
18.3.	Protection of the taxpayer	443
18.3.1.	Constitutional law (also in comparison to human rights)	443
18.3.2.	Tax secrecy	444
18.3.3.	Data protection laws	446
18.3.4.	Compensation for damages and judicial protection	446
18.4.	Transparency of the tax administration	447
18.4.1.	Publication habits of the tax administration	447
18.4.2.	Transparency towards the taxpayer	449
18.4.3.	Use of information towards the public	450
Chapter 19:	Czech Republic	453
	Michal Radvan and Michal Liška
19.1.	Concept of tax transparency and new tendencies	453
19.1.1.	Concept of tax transparency in the Czech Republic	453
19.1.2.	Recent changes in the perception of tax transparency	453

19.2.	Information procurement and data usage by the tax authorities	456
19.2.1.	Prevailing self-assessment principle	456
19.2.2.	Information duties	457
19.2.3.	International exchange of information	461
19.2.4.	Obstacles to information procurement	462
19.2.5.	Automatization and digitalization of the tax law assessment procedure	463
19.3.	Protection of taxpayers' rights	463
19.3.1.	Constitutional law	463
19.3.2.	Tax secrecy and damage compensation	465
19.3.3.	Data protection laws	467
19.4.	Transparency of the tax administration	468
19.4.1.	Publication habits of the tax administration	468
19.4.2.	Transparency towards the taxpayer	469
19.4.3.	Use of information towards the public, especially naming and shaming	471
Chapter 20:	Denmark	473
	Michael Tell
20.1.	Concept of tax transparency and new tendencies	473
20.1.1.	Concept of tax transparency in Denmark	473
20.1.2.	Recent changes in the perception of tax transparency	475
20.2.	Information procurement and data usage by the tax authorities	476
20.2.1.	Principles of tax assessment in Denmark	476
20.2.2.	How do the tax authorities obtain information?	476
20.2.2.1.	From the taxpayer himself	477
20.2.2.2.	From other sources	478
20.2.3.	International exchange of information	480
20.2.4.	Legal or practical obstacles to information procurement	481
20.2.5.	The usage of the information by the tax administration, especially in respect of automatization and digitalization of the tax assessment procedure	482

Table of Contents

20.3.	Protection of the taxpayer	483
20.3.1.	Constitutional law (also in comparison to human rights)	483
20.3.2.	Tax secrecy	483
20.3.3.	Data protection laws	484
20.3.4.	Compensation for damages and judicial protection	485
20.4.	Transparency of the tax administration	486
20.4.1.	Publication habits of the tax administration	486
20.4.2.	Transparency towards the taxpayer	487
20.4.3.	Use of information towards the public, especially the naming-and-shaming approach	488
Chapter 21:	Finland	491
	Kristiina Äimä
21.1.	Concept of tax transparency and new tendencies	491
21.1.1.	Concept of tax transparency in Finland	491
21.1.2.	Recent changes in the perception of tax transparency	492
21.2.	Information procurement and data usage by the tax authorities	494
21.2.1.	Principles of tax assessment in Finland	494
21.2.2.	How do the tax authorities obtain information?	494
21.2.2.1.	From the taxpayer himself	494
21.2.2.1.1.	Regular tax return and reporting and notification obligations	494
21.2.2.1.2.	Special procedures	495
21.2.2.2.	From other sources	498
21.2.2.2.1.	Third-party reporting obligations	498
21.2.2.2.2.	Information obtained from courts and other branches of administration	499
21.2.2.2.3.	Information from private stakeholders	499
21.2.3.	International exchange of information	500
21.3.	Protection of the taxpayer	501
21.3.1.	Constitutional law	501
21.3.2.	Tax secrecy	502

21.4.	Transparency of the tax administration	506
21.4.1.	Publication habits of the tax administration	506
21.4.2.	Transparency towards the taxpayer	506
21.4.3.	Use of information towards the public	507
Chapter 22:	France	511
	Lukasz Stankiewicz
22.1.	Concept of tax transparency and new tendencies	511
22.1.1.	The concept of tax transparency in France	511
22.1.2.	Recent changes in the perception of tax transparency in France	511
22.2.	Information procurement and data usage by the tax authorities	514
22.2.1.	Role of self-assessment and ex officio procedures	514
22.2.2.	How do the tax authorities obtain information	516
22.2.2.1.	From the taxpayer himself	516
22.2.2.2.	From other sources	518
22.2.2.2.1.	Systematic third-party reporting obligations	518
22.2.2.2.2.	Spontaneous transfer of information by third parties	521
22.2.2.2.3.	The administration's power of disclosure	522
22.2.2.2.4.	Information from private stakeholders	524
22.2.3.	International exchange of information	525
22.2.4.	Legal and practical obstacles to information procurement	526
22.2.5.	The use of the information by the tax administration	530
22.3.	Protection of the taxpayer	531
22.3.1.	Constitutional law	531
22.3.2.	Tax secrecy	534
22.3.3.	Data protection laws	536
22.3.4.	Compensation for damages and judicial protection	540
22.4.	Transparency of the tax administration	541
22.4.1.	Publication habits of the tax administration	541
22.4.2.	Transparency towards the taxpayer	542
22.4.3.	Use of information towards the public	545

Table of Contents

Chapter 23:	Germany	549
	Roman Seer, Sebastian Unger, Emran Sediqi and Philipp Wagner
23.1.	Concept of tax transparency and new tendencies	549
23.1.1.	Concept of tax transparency in Germany: Tax transparency in both directions	549
23.1.2.	Recent perceptions of new tax transparency measures and public awareness	550
23.2.	Information procurement and data usage by the tax authorities	553
23.2.1.	Principle of tax assessment	553
23.2.2.	How do the tax authorities obtain information?	553
23.2.2.1.	From the taxpayer	553
23.2.2.1.1.	Regular tax returns and reporting obligations	553
23.2.2.1.2.	Special procedures	555
23.2.2.2.	From other sources	556
23.2.2.2.1.	Third-party reporting obligations	556
23.2.2.2.2.	Information obtained from courts, other branches of administration and central databanks	557
23.2.2.2.3.	Information gathered for other purposes (e.g. preventing of money laundering and tackling terrorism financing)	558
23.2.2.2.4.	Information from private stakeholders (e.g. acquisition of stolen data)	558
23.2.3.	International exchange of information	559
23.2.4.	Legal and practical obstacles to information procurement	559
23.2.4.1.	Banking secrecy	559
23.2.4.2.	Inviolability of the home	560
23.2.4.3.	Restrictions to using unlawfully acquired information in the tax procedure (e.g. CDs with stolen bank data)	560
23.2.5.	The use of information by the tax administration, especially in respect of automatization and digitalization of the tax assessment procedure	562
23.3.	Protection of the taxpayer	563
23.3.1.	Constitutional law (also in comparison to human rights)	563
23.3.2.	Tax secrecy	565

23.3.2.1.	Legal basis and scope	565
23.3.2.2.	Exemptions	565
23.3.2.3.	The legal consequences of violation	566
23.3.3.	Data protection laws	566
23.3.4.	Compensation for damages and judicial protection	567
23.4.	Transparency of the tax administration	567
23.4.1.	Publication habits of the tax administration	567
23.4.1.1.	Process of risk management	568
23.4.1.2.	Publication of advance tax rulings, mutual agreements and arbitration procedures	568
23.4.1.3.	Publication of blacklists of tax haven lists	569
23.4.2.	Transparency towards the taxpayer	570
23.4.2.1.	Access to the tax file	570
23.4.2.2.	Notifications	570
23.4.3.	Use of information towards the public, especially the naming-and-shaming approach	571
23.4.3.1.	Public CbCR	571
23.4.3.2.	Register of beneficial ownership	572
23.4.3.3.	Freedom of Information Acts	572
23.4.3.4.	Further information	573
Chapter 24:	Greece	575
	Eleni Theocharopoulou
24.1.	Concept of tax transparency and new tendencies	575
24.1.1.	Concept of tax transparency in Greece	575
24.1.2.	Recent changes in the perception of tax transparency	577
24.2.	Information procurement and data usage by the tax authorities	578
24.2.1.	Principles of tax assessment in Greece	578
24.2.2.	How do the tax authorities obtain information?	579
24.2.2.1.	From the taxpayer himself	579
24.2.2.1.1.	Regular tax return and reporting and notification obligations	579
24.2.2.1.2.	Special procedures	580
24.2.2.2.	From other sources	580
24.2.2.2.1.	Third-party reporting obligations (banks, employers, notaries, etc.)	580

Table of Contents

24.2.2.2.2.	Information obtained from courts, other branches of administration and central databanks	581
24.2.2.2.3.	Information gathered for other purposes for the prevention of money laundering, tackling terrorism and bribery control	581
24.2.2.2.4.	Information from private stakeholders	582
24.2.3.	International exchange of information	583
24.2.4.	Legal and practical obstacles to information procurement	583
24.2.5.	The use of the information by the tax administration, especially with regard to the automatization and digitalization of the tax assessment procedure	585
24.3.	Protection of the taxpayer	586
24.3.1.	Constitutional law (also in comparison to human rights)	586
24.3.2.	Tax secrecy	587
24.3.3.	Data protection laws	589
24.3.4.	Compensation for damages and judicial protection	590
24.4.	Transparency of the tax administration	592
24.4.1.	Publication habits of the tax administration	592
24.4.2.	Transparency towards the taxpayer	593
24.4.3.	Use of information towards the public, especially the naming-and-shaming approach	594
Chapter 25:	Hungary	597
	István Simon
25.1.	Concept of tax transparency and new tendencies	597
25.1.1.	The concept of tax transparency in Hungary	597
25.1.2.	Recent changes in perception of tax transparency	599
25.2.	Information procurement and data usage by the tax authority	600
25.2.1.	Legal sources of procedural issues of taxation	600
25.2.2.	Principles of assessment pursued in Hungary	601
25.2.2.1.	The basic concept: Self-assessment	601
25.2.2.2.	Electronic communication	601
25.2.3.	How does the tax authority obtain information?	602
25.2.3.1.	Overview	602

25.2.3.2.	Information from the taxpayer himself	602
25.2.3.2.1.	Regular tax returns and reporting and notification obligations	602
25.2.3.2.2.	Special procedures	604
25.2.3.3.	Information from other sources	605
25.2.3.3.1.	Third-party reporting obligations (banks, employers, notaries, etc.)	605
25.2.3.3.2.	Information obtained from other state organs	606
25.2.3.3.3.	Information gathered for other purposes, such as the prevention of money laundering, tackling of terrorism and bribery control	607
25.2.3.3.4.	Information from private stakeholders	608
25.2.4.	International exchange of information	608
25.2.4.1.	Adoption of the new standards in domestic law	608
25.2.4.2.	First experiences with the application of the new standards	610
25.2.5.	Legal and practical obstacles to information procurement	610
25.2.5.1.	Banking secrecy and other financial service providers with secrecy obligations	610
25.2.5.2.	Inviolability of the home	611
25.2.5.3.	Restrictions on the use of unlawfully acquired information	611
25.2.6.	The use of information by the tax administration, especially with regard to the automation and digitalization of the tax assessment procedure	611
25.2.6.1.	Organization of data banks, application of risk-management systems and transparency by cross-checking data	611
25.2.6.2.	Technical standards of data protection	613
25.2.6.3.	Estimation database	613
25.3.	Protection of the taxpayer	613
25.3.1.	Constitutional law (also in comparison to human rights)	613
25.3.1.1.	Constitutional guarantees: The basic rule	613
25.3.1.2.	Protection of legal entities	614
25.3.1.3.	Constitutional data protection guarantees	615
25.3.1.4.	Role of the freedom of profession	616
25.3.1.5.	Role of the freedom of property	616
25.3.2.	Tax secrecy	617
25.3.2.1.	Legal basis and scope	617

Table of Contents

25.3.2.2.	Exemptions	617
25.3.2.3.	Exemptions defined in case law	618
25.3.2.4.	Legal consequences of the violation of tax secrecy	619
25.3.2.5.	Criminal law consequences	619
25.3.2.6.	Civil law consequences	619
25.3.3.	Data protection laws	620
25.3.3.1.	Special data protection provisions for the tax procedure	620
25.3.3.2.	Applicability of general data protection provisions	621
25.3.3.3.	Transposition of and derogation from the EU General Data Protection Regulation in the field of tax procedure (see article 23(1)(e) of the General Data Protection Regulation)	621
25.3.3.4.	Taxpayers' right to delete/correct incorrect data	622
25.3.4.	Compensation for damages and judicial protection	622
25.3.4.1.	Compensation for damages in the event of a violation of the right to privacy or a breach of tax secrecy obligations	622
25.3.4.2.	Administrative and judicial procedures	623
25.4.	Transparency of the tax administration	624
25.4.1.	Publication habits of the tax administration	624
25.4.1.1.	Publication of administrative directives and other means of guidance	624
25.4.1.1.1.	The forms of guidance	625
25.4.1.2.	The openness of the risk management process	626
25.4.1.2.1.	Risk management at the market access point	626
25.4.1.2.2.	Selection of taxpayers for auditing: Mandatory audit	626
25.4.1.2.3.	Selection of taxpayers for auditing: Risk-based methods	627
25.4.1.2.4.	Supporting measures	627
25.4.1.3.	Publication of advance tax rulings and the results of mutual agreement and arbitration procedures	628
25.4.2.	Transparency towards the taxpayer	629
25.4.2.1.	Automatic access to one's own tax file	629
25.4.2.2.	Access on request	629
25.4.2.3.	Notification	630
25.4.2.4.	Access to data banks	630
25.4.2.5.	Judicial practice: Suitability of information as evidence	630

25.4.3.	Use of information towards the public, especially the naming-and-shaming approach	631
25.4.3.1.	Public disclosure of tax payments as an instrument for improving compliance (role of social responsibility)	631
25.4.3.2.	Public country-by-country reporting and centralized registers of beneficial ownership	631
25.4.3.3.	Publication of information about tax subsidies	631
25.4.3.4.	Statistical and other databases	631
Chapter 26:	Ireland	633
	Gerardine Doyle
26.1.	Concept of tax transparency and new tendencies	633
26.2.	Information procurement and data usage by the tax authorities	636
26.2.1.	Self-assessment principle	636
26.2.2.	Information procurement	636
26.2.2.1.	From the taxpayer himself	636
26.2.2.2.	From other sources	638
26.2.3.	International exchange of information	639
26.2.4.	Legal and practical obstacles to information procurement	639
26.2.5.	The use of information by the tax administration	640
26.3.	Protection of the taxpayer	640
26.4.	Transparency of the tax administration	641
26.4.1.	Publication habits of the tax administration	641
26.4.2.	Transparency towards the taxpayer	643
26.4.3.	Use of information towards the public, especially the naming-and-shaming approach	644
Chapter 27:	Italy	649
	Pietro Selicato
27.1.	Concept of tax transparency and new tendencies	649
27.1.1.	The concept of tax transparency in Italy	649
27.1.1.1.	Origins of the concept: The “relationship of trust”	649
27.1.1.2.	The concept of transparency as a duty of the tax administration in its relationship with the taxpayer	651

Table of Contents

27.1.1.3.	The concept of tax transparency in a broader sense	652
27.1.2.	Recent changes in perception of tax transparency	655
27.1.2.1.	Changes regarding transparency of the taxpayer	655
27.1.2.1.1.	Access to databanks of financial institutions	655
27.1.2.1.2.	The voluntary disclosure programmes	656
27.1.2.2.	Changes regarding transparency of tax administration	658
27.2.	Information procurement and data usage by the tax authorities	659
27.2.1.	The Italian system: Self-assessment or assessment ex officio?	659
27.2.2.	How do tax authorities obtain information?	663
27.2.2.1.	From the taxpayer himself	664
27.2.2.1.1.	Regular tax return and reporting and notification obligations	664
27.2.2.1.2.	Special procedures	666
27.2.2.1.2.1.	Cooperative compliance	666
27.2.2.1.2.2.	Advance tax rulings	669
27.2.2.1.2.3.	Mandatory disclosure of tax planning structures	671
27.2.2.2.	From other sources	671
27.2.2.2.1.	Main information sources other than taxpayers	671
27.2.2.2.2.	Information from stolen data	672
27.2.2.2.3.	Information provided by NGOs, specialized journalist associations/coalitions of private researchers and media revelations	673
27.2.2.2.4.	Whistle-blowing system	673
27.2.3.	International exchange of information	674
27.3.	Protection of the taxpayer	674
27.3.1.	Constitutional law and human rights	674
27.3.2.	Data protection laws	676
27.3.3.	Compensation for damages and judicial protection	677
27.4.	Transparency of the tax administration	678
27.4.1.	Publication habits of the tax administration	678
27.4.2.	Transparency towards the taxpayer	679
27.4.3.	Use of information towards the public, especially the naming-and-shaming approach	681

Chapter 28:	Japan	683
	Yuri Matsubara
28.1.	Concept of tax transparency and new tendencies	683
28.1.1.	Concept of tax transparency in Japan	683
28.1.2.	Changes in the perception of tax transparency	685
28.1.2.1.	Perception of the international transparency campaign in Japan	685
28.2.	Information procurement and data usage by the tax authorities	687
28.2.1.	Principles of assessment used in Japan	687
28.2.2.	Information procurement by the tax authorities	687
28.2.2.1.	From the taxpayer himself	687
28.2.2.1.1.	Regular tax return, reporting and notification obligations	687
28.2.2.1.2.	Special procedures	688
28.2.2.2.	From other sources	689
28.2.2.2.1.	Third-party reporting obligations	689
28.2.2.2.2.	Information obtained from courts	690
28.2.2.2.3.	Other branches of administration	692
28.2.2.2.4.	Central data banks	692
28.2.2.2.5.	Information gathered for other purposes, e.g. preventing money laundering, tackling terrorism or bribery control	693
28.2.2.2.6.	Information from private stakeholders: Acquisition of stolen data	695
28.2.2.2.7.	Information provided by non-government organizations, specialized journalist associations/ coalitions of private researchers and media relations	696
28.2.2.2.8.	Existence of a whistleblower system	696
28.2.2.2.9.	Tax investigation of third parties and its limitations	697
28.2.3.	International exchange of information	697
28.2.3.1.	Transposition of the new standards into domestic law	697
28.2.3.2.	First experiences with the application of the new standards (FACTA, AEoI, MCAA and CbCR)	698
28.2.4.	Legal and practical obstacles to information procurement	699
28.2.4.1.	Banking secrecy	699

Table of Contents

28.2.4.2.	Inviolability of the home	699
28.2.4.3.	Restrictions on using unlawfully acquired information	700
28.2.5.	The use of information by the tax administration, especially in respect of automatization and digitalization of the tax assessment procedure	700
28.2.5.1.	Organization of data banks	700
28.2.5.2.	Application of risk management systems	700
28.2.5.3.	Transparency by cross-checking data	701
28.2.5.3.1.	Technical standards of data protection	701
28.3.	Protection of the taxpayer	701
28.3.1.	Constitutional law (also in comparison to human rights)	701
28.3.1.1.	Constitutional data protection guarantees	701
28.3.1.2.	Role of the rule of law, especially the proportionality principle	702
28.3.1.2.1.	Role of the rule of law in constitutional law	702
28.3.1.2.2.	The role of the proportionality principle in the judiciary	703
28.3.1.2.3.	Role of the freedoms of profession and property	705
28.3.2.	Tax secrecy	705
28.3.2.1.	Legal basis, scope and exemptions	705
28.3.2.2.	Legal consequences of violation	705
28.3.3.	Data protection laws	706
28.3.3.1.	Special data protection provisions for the tax procedure	706
28.3.3.2.	Applicability of general data protection provisions	706
28.3.3.3.	Transformation of and derogation from the EU General Data Protection Regulation in the field of tax procedure	707
28.3.3.4.	Right of the taxpayer to deletion/correction of incorrect data	707
28.3.4.	Compensation for damages and judicial protection	708
28.3.4.1.	Damage compensation in the case of the violation of the right to privacy	708
28.3.4.2.	Damage compensation in the case of a breach of tax secrecy	708
28.3.4.3.	Administrative and judicial procedures	709
28.4.	Transparency of the tax administration	709
28.4.1.	Publication by the tax administration	709

28.4.2.	Transparency towards the taxpayer	709
28.4.3.	Use of information towards the public, especially the naming-and-shaming approach	710
28.4.3.1.	Public disclosure of tax payments as a tool to improve compliance (role of social responsibility)	710
28.4.3.2.	Difference between the publication of information on individuals and on corporations	710
28.4.3.3.	Public CbCR	710
28.4.3.4.	Centralized (publicly accessible) registers of beneficial ownership	711
28.4.3.5.	Publication of information about tax subsidiaries and tax-exempt organizations	711
28.4.3.6.	Disclosure of tax information on demand	711
28.4.3.7.	Existence and applicability of freedom-of-information acts	711
28.4.3.8.	Specific use of tax data for research purposes and the existence of tax data laboratories	711
Chapter 29:	Luxembourg	713
	Fatima Chaouche and Katerina Pantazatou
29.1.	Concept of tax transparency and new tendencies	713
29.1.1.	Concept of tax transparency in Luxembourg	713
29.1.2.	Recent changes in the perception of tax transparency	714
29.2.	Information procurement and data usage by the tax authorities	716
29.2.1.	Principles of assessment used in Luxembourg	716
29.2.2.	Information procurement by the tax authorities	716
29.2.2.1.	From the taxpayer himself	716
29.2.2.2.	From other sources	720
29.2.2.2.1.	Reporting obligations of third parties and other branches of administration	720
29.2.2.2.2.	Information obtained from courts, other branches of administration and central data banks	722
29.2.2.2.3.	Information gathered for other purposes, e.g. the prevention of money laundering, tackling of terrorism and bribery control	723
29.2.2.2.4.	Information from private stakeholders	723
29.2.3.	International exchange of information	727

Table of Contents

29.2.4.	Legal and practical obstacles to information procurement	728
29.2.4.1.	Banking secrecy	728
29.2.4.2.	Inviolability of the home	729
29.2.4.3.	Restrictions on the use of unlawfully acquired information in the tax procedure	729
29.2.5.	The use of information by the tax administration, especially in respect of automatization and digitalization of the tax assessment procedure	729
29.2.5.1.	Organization of data banks	729
29.3.	Protection of the taxpayer	730
29.3.1.	Constitutional law (also in comparison to human rights)	730
29.3.2.	Tax secrecy	731
29.3.3.	Data protection laws	732
29.3.4.	Compensation for damages and judicial protection	733
29.3.4.1.	Damage compensation in the case of violation of the right to privacy	733
29.3.4.2.	Damage compensation in the case of a breach of tax secrecy	734
29.3.4.2.1.	Administrative and judicial procedures	734
29.4.	Transparency of the tax administration	735
29.4.1.	Publication habits of the tax administration	735
29.4.1.1.	Publication of, e.g., administrative directives	735
29.4.1.2.	Publication of advance tax rulings	735
29.4.1.3.	Publication of the results of mutual agreement and arbitration procedures	736
29.4.1.4.	Publication of blacklists of tax havens	737
29.4.2.	Transparency towards the taxpayer	738
29.4.2.1.	Automatic access to one's own tax file, access to data banks and technical precautions	738
29.4.2.2.	Access on request	739
29.4.2.3.	Notification	740
29.4.2.3.1.	Of the start of criminal investigations	740
29.4.2.3.2.	Of data received from third parties	742
29.4.2.3.3.	Of transfers of data to other institutions/foreign tax administrations	742
29.4.2.3.4.	By other administrations/private institutions/banks about information transferred to the tax administration	745

29.4.3.	Use of information towards the public, especially the naming-and-shaming approach	745
29.4.3.1.	Public disclosure of tax payments as an instrument to improve compliance (role of social responsibility)	745
29.4.3.2.	Differences between publication of information on individuals and on corporations	746
29.4.3.3.	Public CbCR	747
29.4.3.4.	Centralized (publicly accessible) registers of beneficial ownership	748
29.4.3.5.	Publication of information about tax subsidies and tax-exempt organizations	750
29.4.3.6.	Disclosure of tax information on demand	750
29.4.3.6.1.	On public interest groups and competitors	750
29.4.3.6.2.	Existence and applicability of freedom-of-information acts	750
29.4.3.6.3.	Scientific usage of tax data for research purposes and the existence of tax data laboratories	751
Chapter 30:	The Netherlands	753
	Eric Poelmann
30.1.	Concept of tax transparency and new tendencies	753
30.1.1.	Concept of tax transparency in the Netherlands	753
30.1.2.	Change in the perception of tax transparency	756
30.2.	Information procurement and data usage by the tax authorities	758
30.2.1.	Principles pursued	758
30.2.2.	Obtaining information by the tax authorities	758
30.2.2.1.	Obtaining information from the taxpayer	758
30.2.2.2.	Obtaining information from other sources	759
30.2.2.2.1.	Enhanced relationships	760
30.2.3.	International exchange of information	760
30.2.4.	(Other) limitations	761
30.2.4.1.	Data and guarantees	762
30.2.5.	The use of information by the tax authorities in the assessment procedure	762
30.3.	Protection of the taxpayer	762
30.3.1.	Constitutional law	762
30.3.1.1.	General principles of fair governance	763

Table of Contents

30.3.2.	Tax secrecy	763
30.3.3.	Data protection laws	765
30.3.4.	Compensation for damages	766
30.4.	Transparency of the tax administration	766
30.4.1.	Publication habits of the tax administration	766
30.4.2.	Transparency towards the taxpayer	768
30.4.3.	Use of information towards the public	768
30.5.	Closing words	769
Chapter 31:	Poland	771
	Ziemowit Kukulski and Małgorzata Sęk
31.1.	Concept of tax transparency and new tendencies	771
31.2.	Information procurement and data usage by the tax authorities	773
31.2.1.	Self-assessment as the prevailing method	773
31.2.2.	Information procurement by tax authorities	773
31.2.2.1.	Procurement of information from the taxable person	773
31.2.2.1.1.	Regular tax return and reporting and notification obligations	773
31.2.2.1.2.	Special procedures	775
31.2.2.2.	Procurement of information from other sources	777
31.2.2.2.1.	Third-party tax reporting obligations	777
31.2.2.2.2.	Information obtained from courts, notaries, court enforcement officers and non-tax branches of administration	781
31.2.2.2.3.	Information gathered for other purposes (e.g. prevention of money laundering, tackling terrorism and bribery control)	782
31.2.2.2.4.	Information from private stakeholders	783
31.2.3.	International exchange of information	783
31.2.4.	Legal restrictions on information procurement	786
31.2.4.1.	Professional privilege	786
31.2.4.2.	Banking secrecy	786
31.2.4.3.	Restrictions on the use of unlawfully acquired information in tax procedures	788

31.2.5.	The use of the information by the tax administration, especially in respect of automatization and digitalization of the tax assessment procedure	788
31.3.	Protection of the taxpayer in the context of information procurement, processing, use and exchange	788
31.3.1.	Constitutional basis for the protection of the taxpayer in the context of information procurement, processing, use and exchange	789
31.3.2.	Tax secrecy	790
31.3.2.1.	Legal basis and scope of tax secrecy in Poland	790
31.3.2.2.	Exceptions to tax secrecy	791
31.3.2.3.	Legal consequences of the breach of tax secrecy	791
31.3.3.	Data protection laws	792
31.3.4.	Damage compensation in the case of the breach of tax secrecy	792
31.4.	Transparency of the tax administration	792
31.4.1.	Publication habits of the tax administration	792
31.4.1.1.	Publication of tax legislation and guidance	792
31.4.1.2.	Publication of tax assessments and court judgments	794
31.4.1.3.	Publication of the results of mutual agreement and arbitration procedures	794
31.4.1.4.	Publication of blacklists of tax havens	794
31.4.2.	Transparency towards the taxpayer	795
31.4.3.	Use of information towards the public, including the naming-and-shaming approach	796
31.4.3.1.	Disclosure of tax assessments, judgments and payments	796
31.4.3.2.	Disclosure of information to provide reliable information on actions taken by tax authorities	797
31.4.3.3.	Disclosure of information on demand under freedom-of-information legislation	798
31.4.3.4.	Disclosure of information on tax subsidies and tax-exempt organizations	798
31.4.3.5.	Public country-by-country reporting	799
31.4.3.6.	Centralized publicly available registers of beneficial ownership	799
31.4.3.7.	Scientific use of tax data for research purposes	800

Table of Contents

Chapter 32:	Portugal	801
	Daniela Pessoa Tavares and João Pedro Santos
32.1.	Concept of tax transparency and new tendencies	801
32.1.1.	The concept of tax transparency in Portugal	801
32.1.2.	New tendencies in tax transparency	802
32.2.	Information procurement and data usage by the tax authorities	805
32.2.1.	Self-assessment and assessment ex officio	805
32.2.2.	How do the tax authorities obtain information?	806
32.2.2.1.	From the taxpayer himself	806
32.2.2.1.1.	Regular tax return and reporting and notification obligations	806
32.2.2.1.2.	Special procedures	808
32.2.2.2.	From other sources	808
32.2.2.2.1.	Third-party reporting obligations	808
32.2.2.2.2.	Information obtained from other branches of administration, public entities and central data banks	810
32.2.2.2.3.	Information gathered for other purposes	811
32.2.2.2.4.	Information from private stakeholders	811
32.2.3.	International exchange of information	811
32.2.4.	Banking secrecy and inviolability of the home	815
32.2.5.	The use of the information by the tax administration	816
32.3.	Protection of the taxpayer	818
32.3.1.	Constitutional law	818
32.3.2.	Tax secrecy	820
32.3.3.	Data protection laws	821
32.3.4.	Judicial protection and compensation for damages	822
32.4.	Transparency of the tax administration	823
32.4.1.	Publication habits of the tax administration	823
32.4.2.	Transparency towards the taxpayer	824
32.4.3.	Use of information towards the public	826

Chapter 33:	Romania	829
	Radu Bufan and Mirela Buliga
33.1.	Concept of tax transparency and new tendencies	829
33.1.1.	Concept of tax transparency in Romania	829
33.1.2.	Recent changes in the perception of tax transparency	830
33.2.	Information procurement and data usage by the tax authorities	832
33.2.1.	Principles of assessment pursued	832
33.2.2.	How do the tax authorities obtain information?	833
33.2.2.1.	From the taxpayer himself	833
33.2.2.1.1.	Regular tax returns and reporting and notification obligations	833
33.2.2.1.2.	Special procedures	835
33.2.2.1.3.	Information from other sources managed by the NAFA	838
33.2.2.2.	Information from other sources	838
33.2.2.2.1.	Third-party reporting obligations	839
33.2.2.2.2.	Information obtained from courts, other branches of administration and central data banks	840
33.2.2.2.3.	Information gathered for other purposes, e.g. the prevention of money laundering, and terrorism financing	841
33.2.2.2.4.	Information from private stakeholders	841
33.2.3.	International exchange of information	842
33.2.4.	Legal and practical obstacles to information procurement	843
33.2.4.1.	Direct obstacles	843
33.2.4.2.	Indirect obstacles	844
33.2.5.	The use of the information by the tax administration, especially in respect of automatization and digitalization of the tax assessment procedure	845
33.3.	Protection of the taxpayer	846
33.3.1.	Constitutional law (also in comparison to human rights)	846
33.3.2.	Tax secrecy	847
33.3.2.1.	Legal consequences of violation	849
33.3.3.	Data protection laws	850

Table of Contents

33.3.4.	Compensation for damages and judicial protection	850
33.4.	Transparency of the tax administration	850
33.4.1.	Publication habits	850
33.4.2.	Transparency towards the taxpayer	851
33.4.3.	Use of information towards the public, especially the naming-and-shaming approach	852
Chapter 34:	Russia	855
	Elena Kilinkarova, Andrey Savitsky and Evgeniy Pustovalov
34.1.	Concept of tax transparency and new tendencies	855
34.2.	Information procurement and data usage by tax authorities	857
34.2.1.	Self-assessment and ex officio assessment	857
34.2.2.	Data collection	858
34.2.2.1.	Tax returns	858
34.2.2.2.	Other information from the taxpayer and information from other sources	860
34.2.2.3.	Special procedures	862
34.2.3.	International exchange of information	863
34.2.4.	Legal and practical obstacles to information procurement	864
34.2.5.	The use of information by the tax administration	865
34.3.	Protection of the taxpayer	866
34.3.1.	Tax secrecy	866
34.3.1.1.	Legal basis and scope	866
34.3.1.2.	Exemptions	867
34.3.1.3.	Legal consequences of violation	867
34.3.2.	Data protection laws	869
34.3.2.1.	Special data protection provisions for the tax procedure	869
34.3.2.2.	Applicability of general data protection provisions	870
34.3.2.3.	Right of the taxpayer to delete/correct incorrect data	871
34.3.3.	Compensation for damages and judicial protection	872
34.3.3.1.	Damage compensation in the case of a breach of tax secrecy	872

34.3.3.2.	Damage compensation in cases of a violation of the right to privacy	874
34.3.3.3.	Administrative and judicial procedures	874
34.4.	Transparency of the tax administration	875
34.4.1.	Publication habits of the tax administration	875
34.4.2.	Transparency towards the taxpayer	877
34.4.3.	Use of information towards the public	878
Chapter 35:	Serbia Svetislav V. Kostić	881
35.1.	The concept of tax transparency and new tendencies	881
35.1.1.	Concept of tax transparency in Serbia	881
35.1.2.	Recent changes in the perception of tax transparency	884
35.2.	Information procurement and data usage by the tax authorities	885
35.2.1.	Self-assessment or assessment ex officio?	885
35.2.2.	How the tax authorities obtain information	886
35.2.2.1.	Obtaining information from the taxpayer himself	887
35.2.2.2.	Obtaining tax information from other sources	888
35.2.3.	International exchange of information	889
35.2.4.	Legal and practical obstacles for information procurement	890
35.2.5.	The use of information by the tax administration, especially in respect of automatization and digitalization of the tax assessment procedure	892
35.3.	Protection of the taxpayer	894
35.3.1.	Constitutional protection and legal guarantees	894
35.3.2.	Tax secrecy	895
35.3.3.	Data protection laws	896
35.3.4.	Compensation for damages and judicial protection	897
35.4.	Transparency of the tax administration	897
35.4.1.	Publication habits of the tax administration	897
35.4.2.	Transparency towards the taxpayer	899
35.4.3.	Use of information towards the public, especially the naming-and-shaming approach	899

Table of Contents

Chapter 36:	Spain	903
	Saturnina Moreno González and Marina Serrat Romani
36.1.	Concept of tax transparency and new tendencies	903
36.1.1.	Concept of tax transparency in Spain	903
36.1.2.	Recent changes in the perception of tax transparency	904
36.2.	Information procurement and data usage by the tax authorities	905
36.2.1.	The principles of self-assessment and assessment ex officio	905
36.2.2.	Information procurement by the tax administration	906
36.2.2.1.	Information obtained directly from the taxpayer	907
36.2.2.2.	Information obtained from other sources	912
36.2.3.	International exchange of information	918
36.2.4.	Legal and practical obstacles to information procurement	921
36.2.5.	The use of information by the tax authorities, especially in respect of the automation and digitalization of the tax assessment procedure	924
36.3.	Protection of the taxpayer	926
36.3.1.	Constitutional law (also in comparison to human rights)	926
36.3.2.	Tax secrecy	927
36.3.3.	Data protection laws	929
36.3.4.	Compensation for damages and judicial protection	930
36.4.	Transparency of the tax administration	930
36.4.1.	Publication habits of the tax administration	930
36.4.2.	Transparency towards the taxpayer	933
36.4.3.	Use of information towards the public	935
Chapter 37:	South Africa	939
	Craig West and Jennifer Roeleveld
37.1.	Concept of tax transparency and new tendencies	939
37.1.1.	Concept of tax transparency in South Africa	939
37.1.2.	Recent changes in the perception of tax transparency in South Africa	940

37.2.	Information procurement and data usage by the SARS	941
37.2.1.	Forms of assessment	941
37.2.2.	Manner in which information is gathered	942
37.2.2.1.	From the taxpayer	942
37.2.2.2.	From other sources	943
37.2.3.	International exchange of information	945
37.2.4.	Legal or practical obstacles to information procurement	946
37.2.5.	The use of the information by the tax administration	946
37.3.	Protection of the taxpayer	947
37.3.1.	Constitutional law (also in comparison to human rights)	947
37.3.2.	Tax secrecy	950
37.3.3.	Data protection laws	951
37.3.4.	Compensation for damages and judicial protection	951
37.4.	Transparency of the tax administration	952
37.4.1.	Publication habits of the tax administration	952
37.4.2.	Transparency towards the taxpayer	953
37.4.3.	Use of information towards the public, especially the naming-and-shaming approach	954
Chapter 38:	Sweden	955
	Mats Höglund
38.1.	Concept of tax transparency and new tendencies	955
38.1.1.	Tax transparency and the notion of corporate social responsibility	955
38.1.2.	Recent changes in the perception of tax transparency	956
38.2.	Information procurement and data usage by the tax authorities	957
38.2.1.	Income statements are the basis of the simplified taxation procedure	957
38.2.2.	Income tax returns and remedies for deficiencies	958
38.2.3.	The Tax Agency's powers to conduct investigations	959
38.2.4.	Tax procedures	960
38.2.5.	Taxation process	961

Table of Contents

38.2.6.	Advance notice	962
38.2.7.	Legal or practical obstacles to information procurement	963
38.2.8.	The Swedish principle of public access to official records	966
38.2.9.	Horizontal monitoring and other forms of cooperation	967
38.3.	Protection of the taxpayer	969
38.4.	Transparency of the tax administration	972
38.4.1.	Publication habits of the tax administration	972
38.4.2.	Transparency towards the taxpayer	972
38.4.3.	Use of information towards the public	973
Chapter 39:	Switzerland	975
	Luzius U. Cavelti
39.1.	Concept of tax transparency and new tendencies	975
39.2.	Information procurement and data usage by the tax authorities	978
39.2.1.	Self-assessment or assessment ex officio?	978
39.2.2.	How the tax authorities obtain information	978
39.2.2.1.	From the taxpayer himself	978
39.2.2.1.1.	Regular tax return and reporting and notification obligations	978
39.2.2.1.2.	Special procedures	981
39.2.2.2.	From other sources	982
39.2.2.2.1.	Third-party reporting obligations	982
39.2.2.2.2.	Information obtained from courts and other branches of administration	983
39.2.2.2.3.	Information gathered for other purposes	985
39.2.3.	International exchange of information	987
39.2.4.	Legal and practical obstacles to information procurement	989
39.2.5.	The use of information by the tax administration	991
39.3.	Protection of taxpayer data	992
39.3.1.	Constitutional law	993
39.3.2.	Tax secrecy	994
39.3.3.	Data protection laws	996

39.3.4.	Compensation for damages and judicial protection	997
39.4.	Transparency of the tax administration	997
39.4.1.	Publication habits of the tax administration	997
39.4.2.	Transparency towards the taxpayer	998
39.4.3.	Use of information towards the public, especially the naming-and-shaming approach	999
Chapter 40:	Turkey	1001
	Funda Başaran Yavaşlar and Oytun Canyaş
40.1.	Concept of tax transparency and recent changes	1001
40.1.1.	Concept of tax transparency in Turkey	1001
40.1.1.1.	TP-TA transparency	1002
40.1.1.2.	TP-P transparency	1003
40.1.1.3.	TA-TP transparency	1004
40.1.1.4.	TA-P transparency	1005
40.1.2.	Recent changes in the field of tax transparency	1005
40.2.	Information procurement and data usage by the tax authorities	1008
40.2.1.	Principle dominating tax procedure law	1008
40.2.2.	Information procurement by the tax administration	1010
40.2.2.1.	From the taxpayer himself	1010
40.2.2.2.	From other sources	1012
40.2.3.	International exchange of information	1015
40.2.4.	Legal and practical obstacles to information procurement	1015
40.2.5.	Digitalization of the tax assessment procedure and the use of the information	1017
40.3.	Protection of the taxpayer	1018
40.3.1.	Constitutional law	1018
40.3.2.	Tax secrecy	1020
40.3.3.	Data Protection Law	1022
40.3.4.	Compensation for damages and judicial protection	1024
40.4.	Transparency of the tax administration	1026
40.4.1.	Publication habits of the tax administration	1026
40.4.2.	Transparency towards the taxpayer	1026
40.4.3.	Use of information towards the public	1027

Table of Contents

Chapter 41:	Ukraine	1029
	Danil Getmantsev
41.1.	Concept of tax transparency and new tendencies	1029
41.1.1.	The concept of tax transparency in Ukraine	1029
41.1.2.	Recent changes in the perception of tax transparency	1029
41.2.	Information procurement and data usage by the tax authorities	1031
41.2.1.	Self-assessment or assessment ex officio?	1031
41.2.2.	How the tax authorities obtain information	1032
41.2.3.	International exchange of information	1033
41.2.4.	Legal and practical obstacles to information procurement	1033
41.2.5.	The use of information in tax administration, especially in respect of automatization and digitalization of the tax assessment procedure	1034
41.3.	Protection of the taxpayer	1036
41.3.1.	Constitutional law	1036
41.3.2.	Tax secrets	1038
41.3.3.	Data protection laws	1040
41.3.4.	Compensation for damages and judicial protection	1042
41.4.	Transparency of the tax administration	1043
41.4.1.	Publication habits of the tax administration	1043
41.4.2.	Transparency towards the taxpayer	1047
41.4.3.	Use of information towards the public, especially the naming-and-shaming approach	1049
Chapter 42:	United Kingdom	1053
	Stephen Daly
42.1.	Introduction	1053
42.2.	Information procurement and data usage by HMRC	1054
42.2.1.	Principles of assessment pursued	1054
42.2.2.	Information procurement by HMRC	1055
42.2.2.1.	From the taxpayer himself	1055
42.2.2.2.	From other sources	1058

42.2.3.	International exchange of information	1061
42.2.4.	Obstacles to information procurement	1062
42.2.5.	Other uses of information by the tax administration	1064
42.3.	Protection of the taxpayer	1066
42.3.1.	Constitutional law	1066
42.3.2.	Duty of confidentiality	1067
42.3.3.	Data protection laws	1069
42.3.4.	Compensation for damages and judicial protection	1071
42.4.	Transparency of HMRC	1074
42.4.1.	Publication habits of HMRC	1074
42.4.2.	Transparency towards the taxpayer	1075
42.4.3.	Usage of information towards the public	1077
42.5.	Conclusion	1079
Chapter 43:	United States	1081
	Tracy A. Kaye
43.1.	Concept of tax transparency and new tendencies	1081
43.1.1.	The concept of tax transparency in the United States	1081
43.1.2.	Changes in the perception of tax transparency	1083
43.2.	Information procurement and data usage by the IRS	1085
43.2.1.	Principles of assessment pursued in the United States	1085
43.2.2.	Information procurement by the IRS	1085
43.2.2.1.	From the taxpayer himself	1085
43.2.2.1.1.	Regular reporting	1085
43.2.2.1.2.	Mandatory disclosure of tax-planning structures	1086
43.2.2.1.3.	Country-by-country reporting	1087
43.2.2.2.	From other sources	1087
43.2.2.2.1.	Third-party reporting obligations	1087
43.2.2.2.2.	Transfer of information from third parties	1088
43.2.2.2.3.	Information gathered for other purposes	1089
43.2.2.2.4.	Information from private stakeholders	1090
43.2.2.2.5.	Information for future needs	1091
43.2.2.2.6.	Restrictions on information from third parties	1091

Table of Contents

43.2.3.	International exchange of information	1092
43.2.3.1.	CbC reporting	1093
43.2.3.1.1.	FATCA	1094
43.2.4.	Obstacles to information procurement	1095
43.2.4.1.	Banking secrecy	1096
43.2.4.2.	Inviolability of the home	1096
43.2.5.	Other uses of information by the tax administration	1097
43.3.	Protection of the taxpayer	1098
43.3.1.	Constitutional law	1098
43.3.1.1.	Constitutional data protection guarantees	1098
43.3.1.2.	Role of the rule of law	1099
43.3.1.3.	Role of the freedoms of profession and property	1100
43.3.2.	Tax secrecy	1100
43.3.2.1.	Legal basis and scope	1100
43.3.2.2.	Exemptions	1101
43.3.2.3.	Legal consequences of violation	1101
43.3.3.	Data protection laws	1101
43.3.3.1.	General and special data protection laws	1101
43.3.3.2.	Taxpayers' rights with regard to the deletion and correction of tax data	1102
43.3.4.	Compensation for damages and judicial protection	1102
43.3.4.1.	Violations of rights	1102
43.4.	Transparency of the tax administration	1103
43.4.1.	Publication habits of the tax administration	1103
43.4.1.1.	Publication of administrative directives, rulings, etc.	1103
43.4.1.2.	Openness of the process of risk management of the tax administration	1103
43.4.1.3.	Publication of advance tax rulings	1104
43.4.1.4.	Publication of the results of mutual agreement and arbitration procedures	1105
43.4.1.5.	Publication of blacklists of tax havens	1105
43.4.2.	Transparency towards the taxpayer	1105
43.4.2.1.	Access to one's own tax file, access to data banks and technical precautions	1105
43.4.2.2.	Notifications	1106
43.4.2.2.1.	Of the start of criminal investigations	1106
43.4.2.2.2.	Of data received from third parties	1106

43.4.2.2.3.	Of transfers of data to other institutions/foreign tax administrations	1107
43.4.2.2.4.	By other administrations/private institutions/banks about information transferred to the tax administration	1107
43.4.3.	Use of information towards the public	1107
43.4.3.1.	Public disclosure of tax payments	1107
43.4.3.2.	Public CbC reporting	1108
43.4.3.3.	Beneficial ownership registration	1108
43.4.3.4.	Disclosure by charitable organizations	1109
43.4.3.5.	Freedom of Information Act	1109
43.4.3.6.	Scientific use of data for research purposes	1109
List of Abbreviations		1111